Tusla Early Years Inspections – Parents Consultation

February 2021

Context for consultation

Parents involvement in their child's care and education is crucial to their development and well- being.

- A strong evidence base to support.
- Acknowledged by Tusla.

Aim of Consultation

- To understand parents' awareness and knowledge about Tusla inspections
- To seek parents' views on what they consider important for Tusla to inspect.
- To ask parents if they wanted their views of the service their child attends to be included in the inspection process and if so how could this be achieved.

Process

Qualitative approach based on focus group interviews.

- All registered services issued with letter of invitation
- 66 registered services responded
- Stratified random sample taking account of geographic region, service size and type was taken.

A total of 9 focus groups were convened across a range of service types including childminders and through the medium of Irish.

- A total of 70 parents participated
- 60 female parents and 10 male

March – April 2019

Findings from Consultation

Parents were overwhelmingly positive about their child's service

"I could not praise them highly enough"

"If I had any more children they'd all come here"

Parental Awareness and Knowledge

- Parents were generally unaware that Tusla inspected services.
- Perception of Tusla only as one of child protection reporting.
- Limited knowledge about the availability of Inspection reports.
- Parents were not aware of the role of Tusla in dealing with concerns about children.

"It's not something that's ever crossed my mind"

engagement

Safety

- Parents said their child's safety was the most important issue and should be examined on inspection.

"well, you're leaving your kids in here
in the morning you know,
you would want to hope
that they're safe,
that when you come
back in the evening,
you should have
the whole child in
one piece"

Health welfare and development of the child

Parents want:

- Their children to be well cared for and their needs to be met
- Good relationships and positive interactions between staff and children and between the children
- Educational activities to support their child's development

Governance

It is important to parents that:

- Staff are qualified and vetted
- Staff turnover is low
- Their child has a key worker
- The service keeps them informed about the service and their child
- They can discuss their concerns

Environment

Parents identified the following as being important:

- having enough space for their children
- a rest area
- a good standard of cleanliness
- access to outdoor play areas
- toileting facilities

Unacceptable Practices

Parents said the following would be of significant concern and totally unacceptable in a service:

- Children not happy
- Poor safety
- Poor nutrition
- Personnel in the service don't know your name
- Parents not allowed free access to the service
- Someone hurting your child

Parents Involvement in Early Years Inspections

What parents told us about being involved in the inspection process.

- It is the norm in primary schools
- They may not be objective and knowledgeable about regulatory requirements
- Potential for problems between parent and provider when negative feedback is given
- Where a parents has difficulty with the service they must address it with the service.
- Involvement may be important if a parent is not happy with a service

Recommendations

Parents should know:

- When an inspection is taking place in their service
- The results of an inspection of their service
- Where to access inspection reports
- About the services complaints process

Providers should share the services inspection report with parents

Parents should have a choice in sharing their views on the services with the Inspectorate

Consideration should be given to recognising “excellent services” and the involvement of parents in this selection.
